Dr. Hannah Kia is an Assistant Professor at the University of British Columbia's School of Social Work. Currently, her program of research broadly addresses aging in lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, Two Spirit, and other sexual and gender minority (LGBTQ2S+) communities, and additionally centres questions related to social work and other professional practice with these populations. She is, in particular, interested in examining expectations and experiences of aging in trans and gender diverse communities, and intends to draw on a variety of critical and intersectional traditions of scholarship to inform this work.
